ASSERTIVENESS

HEALTHY BOUNDARIES

If you are a "Yes woman" or a "Yes man" remember whenever you say "Yes" to extra work beyond your bandwidth, you are potentially saying "No" to yourself or loved ones. We all get the same 24 hours a day. It's your decision how to use that precious time. Be wise.

MINDFULNESS

SUPPORT NETWORK

Get support. Let your partner or best friend know what's happening in your inner world. If you aren't comfortable to do so, then speak to a professional. Seeking support from your GP, a counsellor or a coach is nothing to be ashamed of. Asking for help is a sign of strength and has a significant positive effect on your well-being.

MOVEMENT

Get your body moving. When you exercise, your body releases neurochemicals such as dopamine and endorphin, the natural feel-good drugs. Yoga, taichi and qigong are great options. However, anything that gets you moving, out of your head and into your body will do the job. Your body will love you for it and you'll reap the benefits quickly.

GOOD FOOD & WATER

You've heard this many times. Still, the basics of food and water are often overlooked when we're stressed and make silly choices. You are what you eat (and drink) so invest in high quality food. Eat fresh, seasonal and local whenever possible. Avoid tap water, get a filter to eliminate fluoride and chlorine. Your liver will thank you.

SLEEP

A good night of sleep is the best strategy to reset and recharge your body and mind. Establish a sleep hygiene routine to get the most rest out of your sleep. Commit to 7+ hours of sleep a night. Avoid screens and stimulating activities 1 hour prior to bed. Catch the melatonin wave by going to bed when you start to feel drowsy.
